Partners and experts

These include:
- UN Women
- The World Bank Group
- The Food and Agriculture Organization (FAO)
- The UNESCO Institute for Statistics (UIS)
- Land Portal Foundation
- Genre en Action

Supporters

The gender programme is supported by:
- The Norwegian Ministry of Foreign Affairs
- The Finnish Ministry of Foreign Affairs
- The Austrian Development Agency
- The Swiss Agency for Development and Cooperation

The launch of French Wikigender is supported by:
- The French Development Agency (AFD)
- The French Ministry of Foreign Affairs and International Development (MAEDI)
- The International Organisation of La Francophonie (IOF)

Wikigender complements the OECD's Gender, Institutions and Development Database (GID-DB) and the Social Institutions and Gender Index (SIGI).

To learn more about Wikigender
www.wikigender.org

Contact information
OECD Development Centre
2, rue André Pascal
75775 Paris Cedex 16
France

Tel.: +33 (0)1 45 24 90 08

contact@wikigender.org

Follow us on Twitter and Facebook for the latest updates and live tweets from key events!

@Wikigender

www.facebook.com/Wikigender-28893683152

wikigender

ENGAGE   ENRICH   ENLIGHTEN

© Lorimer Images/Shutterstock.com

www.wikigender.org

Your online platform to share research, data and solutions to advance gender equality

About Wikigender

As a global online collaborative platform, Wikigender links policy makers and experts from both developed and developing countries to find solutions to advance gender equality. It provides a centralised space for knowledge exchange on key emerging issues, with a strong focus on the Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs), and in particular on SDG 5.

It allows you to:
- Engage with a global community of gender experts, policy makers, researchers and practitioners, both in English and French.
- Enrich the discussions and debates – online, or at events – about the challenges, breakthroughs, research and trends in gender equality.
- Enlighten the way forward for gender equality and development by contributing your comments and analyses.

Wikigender in French

Wikigender is the first online sharing platform to offer the francophone community a centralised hub of information on gender and development. Articles and online discussions are tailored to the francophone gender and development community with a special focus on Africa. Genre en Action is a key partner in the launch of a Wikigender in French.

© Hector Conesa/Shutterstock.com
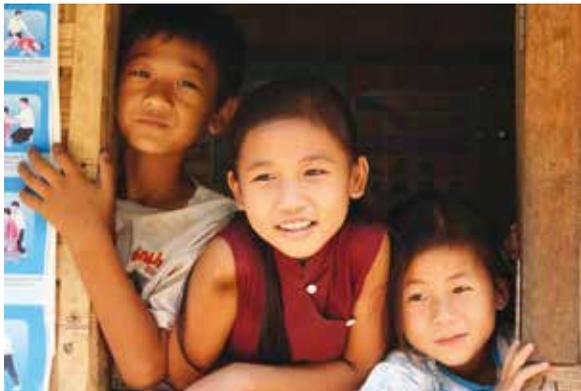

What Wikigender offers

Key information on gender statistics

Access relevant information on gender data and statistics from the OECD Development Centre and international agencies working on gender equality. This includes the Gender, Institutions and Development Database (GID-DB) and the Social Institutions and Gender Index (SIGI).

Country profiles

Learn about gender equality in your country: each country profile provides a snapshot of information on gender equality with key statistics and overall performance in the SIGI.

Thematic articles

Read a wide range of articles on various thematic areas, such as: Sustainable Development Goals, education and skills, economy and finance, health and well-being, legislation and policy, peace and security, science and technology, social norms, violence against women.
- As a registered user you can update articles in the thematic areas to improve the information
- We welcome new articles. Submit yours to: contact@wikigender.org

Community Portal

Find information on gender-related events, read about the latest trending gender topics in the media review and access newly published reports on gender equality.
- As a registered user you can share information about gender-related events, news and latest reports
- Participate in the forum to exchange ideas on different topics

© arindambanerjee / Shutterstock.com

Online discussions

Exchange your ideas on gender equality issues in online discussions. These are regularly organised on Wikigender. Experts in relevant fields moderate, and general public is invited to contribute. Main findings are presented at events organised by the OECD Development Centre.

Wikigender University Programme

The Wikigender University Programme invites students enrolled in partner universities to write on selected topics and help improve the content on the platform. It gives visibility to the articles written by the students and is an opportunity for students to exchange with each other.
- Create new articles through the Wikigender University Programme
- Update articles in the thematic areas
- Share information in the Community Portal
- Access a dedicated forum to exchange ideas